About the Archive

The Asian Film Archive is a non-governmental organization founded to preserve the rich film heritage of Singapore and Asian Cinema. It hopes to encourage scholarly research on film and to promote a wider critical appreciation of this art form.

The Archive is the winner of the New Non-Profit Initiative Award at the Annual National Volunteers and Philanthropy Awards 2007, which recognizes organisations for their originality, sustainability, impact and best practices. We are an affiliate with the International Federation of Film Archives (FIAF) and a member of the Southeast Asia-Pacific Audiovisual Archive Association (SEAPAVAA). Our collection includes works by some of Asia’s most renowned filmmakers like Mike de Leon, Lino Brocka, Hussain Haniff and U-Wei Haji Saari.

Culturally significant films are preserved by the Archive so that our future generations can be inspired by and learn from such important cinematic works. To make our film collection more accessible to its audience, we have developed outreach programmes with the aim to inspire greater appreciation for film, its art and industry.

Mission To save, explore and share the Art of Asian Cinema

Objectives To preserve the film heritage of Singapore and Asian Cinema in order to promote appreciation and build cultural value of Asian films through research, education and publication.

Core activities

Heritage Preservation: Reel Emergency Project
The Asian Film Archive preserves culturally important works by independent Asian filmmakers so that our future generations can enjoy and learn from them. We have been able to collect the only surviving copies of some of these works. But many other films have yet to be acquired and properly preserved, hence, they are at serious risk of physical degeneration. Such is the urgency of our work in the Reel Emergency Project.

Public Access: Asian Film Archive Collection Reference Collection
The Asian Film Archive is committed to provide public access to films within its collection, many of which are often unpublished resources for education, teaching, research, and creative inspiration.

Literacy and Education: Moving Minds Project
The Asian Film Archive is a leader in the development of film literacy education for educators and students. As visual media saturate our lives, it is vital that students learn to decode images and messages, and to ask critical questions about who is creating them and for what purpose.

Asian Film Archive Presents
The Asian Film Archive Presents is a series of specially curated film events with a focus on enhancing the cinematic experience for audiences. Through screenings and discussions, it aims to nurture a film community with a passion for Asian cinema.

Asian Film Archive Collection DVD Publications
The Asian Film Archive produces and publishes critically acclaimed films from its collection on DVD as collectibles for film lovers and more importantly, educational resources for teachers and students.
Acquisition

The Asian Film Archive acquired a total of over 600 new Southeast Asian film titles in 2007, bringing its total collection to be over 1000 titles. A large proportion of the acquisition was made up of Singapore films from the Singapore Film Commission, which supports Singaporean filmmakers by granting funding for the making of short and feature films. The acquisition was made possible through a Memorandum of Understanding between Asian Film Archive and the Commission to archive all the films that were funded by the Commission’s funding schemes.

The Archive also inked an archival agreement with the Cathay Organization’s Malay films arm, Cathay-Keris Films, to preserve its classic Malay films and an important slice of Singapore’s cinematic history. Cathay-Keris was one of the two major film production companies during Singapore’s golden era of film in the 1950s and 1960s. This Cathay Malay Classics Collection is made up of all the existing 100 film titles in Cathay-Keris’ collection and consists of 35mm and 16mm films.

In addition, the Archive also acquired a variety of Southeast Asian titles, in particular films from the Philippines’ largest film studio LVN and digital films from Thailand’s Thaiindie. The Archive’s collection thus expanded to include film prints and films made in all forms of digital media.

The Archive extends its gratitude to donors, filmmakers and collectors for providing gifts to the collections. This list below highlights some of the titles acquired in 2007:

Preservation

A milestone was reached with the signing of a Memorandum of Understanding between the Asian Film Archive, Singapore Film Commission and the National Library Board, with the cooperation of the two governmental authorities and the Archive in working together to preserve and provide access to a comprehensive Singapore film collection. In this Memorandum of Understanding, the Archive would preserve, catalogue and provide reference copies of Singapore films in an Asian Film Archive library reference section housed within the National Library Board’s library@esplanade in downtown Singapore. All films funded by the Singapore Film Commission and the Media Development Authority of Singapore would include a condition for filmmakers to deposit two copies of the completed films to be submitted to the Archive for preservation and access to public. In addition, the three parties would also organize joint outreach activities to promote the collection. The agreement signing was reported on Cinema Journal and Channel News Asia.

The Asian Film Archive catalogued a total of 198 film titles and is in the process of updating its online database to reflect all these catalogues. The documentation of titles acquired includes the signing of archival contracts with the filmmakers, accessioning, and labeling. Furthermore, specially printed reference DVD copies and DVD covers were prepared. The reference section was open to the public in October 2007 in conjunction with the United Nations Audiovisual Heritage Day. This is a giant step towards making the Asian Film Archive Collection accessible to researchers and the general public.

The Asian Film Archive was the first Singapore organisation to take part in the Audiovisual World Heritage Day, a special day set aside by the UNESCO to raise awareness on the importance of audio-visual preservation. The Archive contributed a video clip from its collection, Sunshine Singapore (1967) by Rajendra Gour as part of the Audiovisual World Heritage Trailer that was compiled from the works of filmmakers and archives’ collections from around the globe. Several hundred DVDs of this trailer were being circulated at the UNESCO General Conference and played to thousands of delegates in attendance in honor of the World Day for Audiovisual Heritage. The trailer can be viewed from the website: http://www.ccaaa.org/wdavh/?c=trailer.

In addition, the Asian Film Archive continues to work closely with our archiving partner, National Archives of Singapore on backend preservation work. In this partnership, the National Archives of Singapore supports the Asian Film Archive by committing its resources that include climate-controlled and secure storage, maintenance and transfers of formats. The Asian Film Archive focuses on front end archival work which includes research, acquisition, cataloguing.
The Archive encountered more filmmakers who were becoming more aware of the need for preservation and were generally supportive of Archive’s work. Through its constant interaction with filmmakers, there was also a willingness amongst the independent filmmaking community to donate their works to Archive.

The Archive continued to face perennial issues of high costs and difficulty in fund raising for preservation work. Seen largely as a cost centre whose benefits are intangible and immeasurable, preservation work became an appreciated aspect of the archival process, but remained a difficult area to justify costs for.

As its first film restoration project, the Archive selected a short film from its collection that was made in the 1970s. The film, A Labour of Love, by one of the earliest known Singaporean short filmmakers, Rajendra Gour, is a 16mm print that has started to experience a significant amount of warping, stickiness, colour fading, and vinegar syndrome. The Archive is considering all avenues of restoration available including digital audio and film restoration. Though the costs are considerable, this project remains high on the Archive’s priority and the Archive is exploring different fund raising methods to continue its preservation efforts.

The Asian Film Archive had a good year of establishing ties with regional archives and film festivals through speaking engagements, jury appointments, and institutional visits. These organizations included the Hanoi Cinematheque, the Vietnam Film Institute, Osian-Cinefan International Film Festival (India), FIAF Congress (Japan), National Film Center (Tokyo), Cinemanila International Film Festival (the Philippines), Jakarta Cinematheque, and Jakarta International Film Festival.

Besides being a member of the Southeast Asia-Pacific Audiovisual Archive Association (SEAPAVAA) since 2006, the Asian Film Archive was admitted to the International Federation of Film Archives (FIAF) as the youngest affiliate member in April 2007.
Education & Research

The Asian Film Archive initiates outreach programmes on film education and research that help develop an understanding and appreciation for the language, art and industry of the film media. A total of 49 events were organized, including 17 Educators' Workshops, 12 Film Literacy Seminars, 12 talks by filmmakers, 4 Inter-school Filmmaking Workshops and a Symposium. These events reached out to a total of 3201 participants, including 1006 educators and 1426 students.

Educators’ Workshops

The Asian Film Archive conducted a new series of workshops for educators to introduce participants to the basics of film literacy and to the exciting world of reading film in different contexts. The workshops provided a platform of resources relevant to the teaching and learning of the moving image media in the formal sectors of education. Apart from the introductory course, new workshops were added to widen the breadth and depth of learning film literacy for more advanced educators.

“Movies are analyzed in a way I never would have thought was possible.” - Norasyikin Md Jumain, Singapore Sports School

“Very useful strategies of incorporating film into the Literature classroom. Techniques of film appreciation were explored in depth.” - Tan Li Lian, St Andrew's Junior College

“导师分析清晰明了.” - Teo Mui Hong, Hwa Chong Institution

Inter-school Filmmaking Workshops

The Archive also launched the Inter-school Filmmaking Workshops. Four film schools (School of Art, Design and Media, Nanyang Technological University; Puttnam Film School; La Salle College of the Arts; School of Technology for the Arts, Republic Polytechnic; Centre for the Arts, National University of Singapore) took part in this series of workshops, opening up their facilities and taking turns to host the filmmakers and students from other schools. 21 film projects were produced and completed by 64 film students under the mentorship of award-winning filmmakers.

"I think a key significance of the workshops is that film students from different schools are in attendance. This creates a more collaborative environment for the students." - Boo Junfeng, film student at Puttnam School of Film, La Salle College for the Arts

"… has opened my eyes to honest filmmaking. It was very inspiring for young student filmmaker like me." - Lincoln Chia, film student at School of Art, Design and Media, Nanyang Technological University
Research
The Archive mentored two groups of students from Raffles Institution as part of the Moving Minds Lab research projects. These students presented at the 10th SEAPAVAA Conference in Cambodia in August 2007. Despite them being the youngest conference presenters in SEAPAVAA’s history, the students earned much praise from other conference participants. A symposium on Southeast Asian Digital Cinema organized by the Archive saw research papers presented by pre-tertiary and tertiary film students on the issue of digital media in Southeast Asia filmmaking movements. The Asian Film Archive also received invitations to speak and present at conferences and seminars for students, educators and the industry professionals.

Roundtable Discussions and In Conversations
The Asian Film Archive partnered with the Asia Research Institute and the National Library Board to host a series of Roundtable Discussions and In Conversation sessions with the digital filmmakers from the region. In all, the 10 sessions attracted more than 200 people and facilitated discussions between the filmmaking groups, academia and members of the public.

The Archive also hosted Ray Edmondson, one of the most respected and knowledgeable audiovisual archivists in the world. In the free-form discussion, Ray and the audience delved into the issues and concerns that audiovisual archivists in our region faced with. More than 30 other filmmakers, critics and scholars were involved in the Archive’s programmes, including Alexis Tioseco, Apichatpong Weerasethakul, Ben Slater, Benjamin McKay, Hassan Muthalib, Gertjan Zulhoif, Khavn de la Cruz, Lynn Lee, Mirabelle Ang, Riri Riza, Sasikan Suwannasuth, Tan Chui Mui, Thunska Pansittivorakul and Wong Lung Hsiang.

Presentations

While the Archive does not have a screening space, it has collaborated with organizations and festivals in developing screening opportunities for the Archive’s collection of works to be accessed by the public.

The launch of the ambitious Cineodeon project, where students from schools around the island mount an independent cinema chain showcasing selected works from the Archive’s collection, gave many students the opportunity to watch films that were once virtually inaccessible to them.

The Asian Film Archive also curated an exhibition on Southeast Asian Digital Cinema at the library@esplanade that ran for four months from August to December 2007.

A total of 56 film showings were organized by either the Archive or jointly with its partners. Special film programmes curated by the Asian Film Archive included:

i) Sarjan Hassan (1955) by Lamberto Avellano and P Ramlee at Reflections on Bukit Chandu as part of WWII commemoration celebrations by National Archives of Singapore. Event was reported by Channel News Asia.

ii) Asian Film Archive Presents Silent Women of Ozu, Mizoguchi and Naruse with live Gamelan accompaniment with the National University of Singapore Arts Festival. Event was reported by Straits Times.

iv) Cineodeon screenings where 11 educational institutions organized 50 screenings of Southeast Asian film programmes from the Asian Film Archive Collection from Aug-Nov 2007, reaching out to a total audience of 1628, and raised S$1982.90 for the showcased filmmakers. Programme was reported by Wall Street Journal Asia, Channel 5 and 8 News.

v) Asian Film Archive Presents Retrospective on Rajendra Gour at National Museum.

Programme was reported by Straits Times and Today.

Films presented in 2007 include:

Future Plans & Commitment

The Archive is a custodian to the rich film heritage of Singapore and Asian Cinema. While the Archive has accomplished much in 2007, there is still much work that needs to be done. To manage its increasing collection, the Archive will look into expanding its team in the Film Collection department. The Archive will be upgrading its database system to serve our clients more effectively. In addition, the Archive will restore and present some of the titles in its Collection. To ensure sufficient secure storage for its Collection in the long run, the Archive is also doing a feasibility study on long-term large-scale preservation of analogue and digital audiovisual materials.

Our mission extends beyond the good work of preserving films and its related materials: our aim is to make our collections available to the public, inspire appreciation for Asian cinema, and ensure that future generations have access to our cultural heritage. As more schools become aware of the importance of film and media literacy, the Archive is stepping up efforts to put together more resources that educators can use in their classrooms. The Archive will be publishing new DVD anthologies to add to the range of educator’s resources available.

We are keenly aware of the important roles our board, staff, volunteers, partners and donors play in building the strength of this institution, which would not exist without their generosity. And we reaffirm our commitment to save, explore and share the art of Asian Cinema.
Partners & Supporters

Each acquisition, preservation, restoration, film programme, presentation, exhibition, lecture, talk requires a sponsor. Without these sponsors, our work would not have been possible. We thank them immensely whose generous support is recognized here.

Volunteers

Our volunteer coordinator manages a pool of more than 100 volunteers who contribute their knowledge and skills as well as their time, concern, and care for our film heritage. Volunteer gatherings are organised to induct new volunteers, encourage sharing, appreciate existing volunteers and to foster a conducive working environment.

Each volunteer is given a volunteer handbook stating the rights and responsibilities, policies, as well as the work of the Archive. The Asian Film Archive has volunteers providing much needed services such as cataloguing, administration, database management, public relations and media communication and assisting with our outreach and education projects. Training is also provided for volunteers interested in cataloguing and preservation work. Every year, during a volunteer gathering, we would also give special mention to outstanding volunteers.

“I found ineffable satisfaction from my work with the Archive that stupefied any existing expectations I might have had as I achieved things I never thought possible for myself and grew in ways I believed ever out of my reach. I received support that ranged from adequate to overwhelming but always, always sufficient and radiating. It has been a priceless experience.” – Goh Zhi Ling (Intern, May – Aug 2007)

The Archive runs an internship programme throughout the year, popular with undergraduate and graduate students, in Singapore and overseas. Through this internship programme, we groom and nurture the talent pool for our specialised work. Interns are empowered to carry out self initiated projects with resources at the Archive, giving them a sense of ownership and achievement. In 2007, we hosted three undergraduate students from Nanyang Technological University and one graduate student from the University of East Angelia, United Kingdom.
